

Abstract of the Disclosure

A golf club head which comprises a main body provided with a socket, and a weight member disposed in the socket, wherein the socket is a tubular portion extending to the inside of the main body and having a through-hole extending therethrough, the weight member comprises a main portion accommodated to the through-hole, and the weight member is secured in the through-hole by crushing a crush portion into the main portion so that the main portion expands, pressing on the surface of the through-hole.